Alice Notley:
I've taught trance in workshops. It is a bit of a mine field. I gave as an exercise a sort of self-hypnosis, going-back-to-age-four-type thing, somewhere and at least one person in that class didn't want to do it because he or she didn't want to cope with what had happened at age four. For me it's an ideal age, for others it isn't. Then, I learned from my stepdaughter Kate Oliver, who was studying hypnotherapy professionally, an exercise for going into the future, by flying above and along a river (in trance of course) and then stopping somewhere to see what's going to happen there. That is, the river is a time line. I added this as a possible way to participate in the going-back exercise -- one could go back or go ahead. An older woman in one workshop did the going ahead one, which shook her up a lot, though her poem was mysterious, as poems are, and I wasn't sure why she was shaken: she didn't want to say, it was personal. In the same class a woman went into a trance and saw that something was happening to her car -- she saw outside the room and when she went out during the break, her alarm had gone off and someone had broken into it. After this class a woman came up to me and cautioned me, as well, against doing this sort of thing without preparing people better for coming out of the trance . . . So. I'm not sure if one should teach it the way I did. But I think poetry is written in a transpersonified state, and this fact could be talked about more. When I teach, usually I discuss a topic and lead the group gradually to write, and at the point when I say now let's write, something clicks inside everyone and they go to this other place. I can see it on their faces. Then they just start writing.

Weirdest Art Collective – WAN – When WAN said they would send me something, I said sure. A few weeks later I received a book full of scrawled drawings, pot burns, pieces of trash, and used candy wrappers. I was elated.

Clayton Eshleman
While Artaud cannot be called a shaman, there is a shamanic matrix binding his life and work. This presence contributes significantly to the way his image strikes us. Although there is nothing in Artaud's materials, to my knowledge, that would indicate that he consciously made use of shamanic lore or stance, such a lack makes the matrix even more pertinent. When I hold up Artaud's image, I see shamanic elements in it like a black rootwork suspended, coagulated yet unstable, in liquid.

Stewart Home, The Assault on Culture
Since 'art' as a category has been projected back onto the religious icons of the middle ages, it is not surprising that those who oppose it should situate themselves within a 'utopian current' that they, in turn, trace back to medieval heresies. After the event, it is easy enough to perceive a tradition running from the Free Spirit through the writings of Winstanley, Coppe, Sade, Fourier, Lautreamont, William Morris, Alfred Jarry, and on into Futurism and Dada - then via Surrealism into Lettrisme, the various Situationist movements, Fluxus, 'Mail Art', Punk Rock, Neoism and contemporary anarchist cults. Taking this as our hypothesis - we will not trouble ourselves over whether such a perspective is 'historically correct' - we will construct a 'meaningful' story from these fragments. Whether or not our 'fiction' is factually valid, it can assist our understanding of disparate phenomena.

Nate Young (Wolf Eyes) - I have always thought of the vocalist as the figure in a painting. Vocals help balance a composition and give meaning and context. On this record, I am using a double-vocal technique in order to blur the meaning of the words I am saying. For example, “You get your car but you lose your feet” is said simultaneously as, “You use a clock to lose more sleep.” I like the idea of everyone hearing things differently, so I am attempting to force an audio illusion with my vocals.

Billions of particles of invisible "dark matter" are probably flying through your body right now, passing through the spaces between your atoms without a trace. According to conventional thinking, these particles should be somewhat less abundant during the winter and should peak around June 1. But a new study suggests this calculation is way off; the real peak is actually at the beginning of March.

Anima's anarchic recordings were radical, atonal improvisations with unconventional instruments, unrestrained creativity, and utterly unstructured performances - primal, experimental free-jazz with a touch of prog-rock. In an unlikely array, instruments like drums, bass and cornet were combined with Paul Fuchs' own homemade inventions: the Fuchshorn, Fuchszither, and Fuchsbass; Limpe Fuchs' wordless vocal yelps and screams; and audio-visual machines: light-ray oscillographs and movement holograms. Fringe community outsiders, the Fuchs took freak-out avant-garde to a new level. By 1987 Anima had become Limpe Fuchs' solo project. She preserves the 'no formalisms, no explanations' methodology in her solo work.
